CITIZENS ARE CONVINCED IT WAS SURELY SUICIDE.

BUFFALO, N. Y., March 11.-The impression is stronger than ever in Buffalo that Arthur Pennell, accused of connection with the murder of Burdick, intentionally ran his automobile over the 30-foot embankment into Yamerthal stone quarry and killed himself.

While the police profess to believe that the death of Pennell will have no effect upon their search for Burdick's murderer, there is a general conviction that the Burdick mystery is a sealed book that never will be opened.

Should it be certain that Pennell deliberately killed himself surely no man ever sought a stranger method. Those who profess to think that the wrecking of the automobile was accidental say that it is extremely unlikely that Pennell would have taken his wife with him if his mind was made up to plunge his machine into the stone quarry. But this Pennell was a queer

HE WAS A REMARKABLE PERSON.

The detectives who trailed him and Mrs. Burdick in Buffalo say that he was the most cunning subject they ever encountered. He was extremely resourceful, was possessed of remarkable nerve and, above all, was careful to protect himself. In fact, in Pennell's life everything shows that his motive at ail times for all actions was self-interest.

Harassed by the police and detectives, Pennell was on the verge of nervous collapse. Although he appeared to have the confidence of his wife's family and certainly had the confidence of his wife, he knew that suspicion of the murder of Burdick had become concentrated upon him by the public, and that the storm was likely to burst at any moment.

Ordinarily a man contemplating suicide under such circumstances would shoot himself or take poison, or perhaps go down to Niagara Falls and slide over the cataract into oblivion. But, if Pennell had committed suicide in any conventional way or if he had disappeared it would have been considered prima facie evidence that he had murdered Burdick.

TO DIVERT SUSPICION IN DEATH.

Resourceful, selfish, cunning, it would be natural for Pennell, if he wants ! to kill himself, to seek some way of doing it that would not leave suspicion behind. He was the sort of man who would have thought out the project of going out into the lonesome suburb and running his automobile into a stone quarry.

Death was almost a certainty. Those who believe that the disaster was caused by Pennell say that he knew the quarry, knew the long drop from the street and knew that the chances were against coming out o fthe leap

But if he had gone out there in that lonesome section and guided his machine into the quarry alone he might not have been seen and the suspicion of intent would have attached when his body should be found. What more natural than that he should take his wife along? Surely, no man could say then that his attempt was deliberate.

It appears almost barbarous to accuse a man of risking the life of his wife, with a certainty of almost killing her, in order to cover up his own suicide, but Pennell plainly did not think much of his wife. She had endured martyrdom at his hands. She had plenty of money, and friends of the family say that this money was the only tie that bound Pennell to her.

Two small boys were the only witnesses of the accident. They were George Dunbar and William Lennan. Walking west in Kensington avenue, about an eighth of a mile from Fillmore avenue, the lads stepped from the roadway as Pennell's automobile sped by them. It was a light roadster of at the nUion League Club last night and reached not later than the date named. the Stanhope pattern, though, in spite of the weather, the hood was not up fell downstairs. as was usually the case when Pennell was accompanied by Mrs. Burdick or Pennell wore a rain-coat and a derby hat. His wife, holding her wraps close about her, leaned against her husband as if for protection against the the club. The diners remained at the heavy wind.

PLUNGED OVER PRECIPICE.

When the machine was a hundred feet ahead of them the boys noticed Pennell reach up as a gust of wind dislodged his hat. A moment later the machine swung sharply to the left, jumped the curb and plunged across the sidewalk and disappeared over the edge of the precipice and dropped integrated in the care in the ca the Yamerthal quarry, which runs along Kensington avenue about eight feet throw his hands in the air, as though the wrecked machine alarmed them and they ran to report the accident at the home of Charles Lamont, of No. 1971 Fillmore avenue. He got a lantern on the fourth floor and doctors called. and accompanied them to the scene of the accident.

SLID DOWN AND FOUND THE BODIES.

They slid down the declivity and first found Mrs. Pennell's body. She age. Messages were sent to his family. was lying clear of the auto, but unconscious. Pennell was found beneath called in to-day and an operation was the wrecked machine. One of the edges had fallen on his head, crushing it performed, the doctors hoping to relieve flat. The lads took off their coats and covered Mrs. Pennell, who was groan- the pressure the fracture caused on the ing with pain. Then they released Pennell, while one of their number ran to a telephone and called up the Sisters' Hospital and the Sixth District line McKesson Herrick, Henry Hobart

The directions had been so imperfectly given that the hospital ambulance did not reach the spot until an hour after the accident. Dr. Smith bulance did not reach the spot until an hour after the accident. Dr. Smith found Mrs. Pennell covered with blood. She had a deep cut over four inches in length above her right eye. Her skull was fractured. There was a compound fracture of the right arm. The first and second fingers of her left hand were broken and her face badly cut. Her breast and body were tartfully bruised, and it is probable she has sustained serious internal injuries.

She was hurried to the hospital and placed at once on the operating table, where Dr. Eugene Smith performed a resection of an elbow joint, if [ cutting away fragments of the bone. The operation will leave the arm ed and limp. Later it was decided that the frontal bone was fractured and the skull was trephined, a large section of the bone, which was pressing on the brain, being removed.

Pennell's body, crushed almost beyond recognition by the 1,800-pound automobile, was taken to the City Morgue, where scores of his friends identified it. Pennell wore a stylish business suit, rain coat and outing gioves. In his pockets, which the police searched expectantly, were found Many Small Bequests Made to only a card case, containing his cards and a number of newspaper clippings; purse containing $35, a gold watch bearing his initials, a gold wedding ring and the usual odds and ends.

PENNELL BEAVILY INSURED.

Unless Pennell took out life insurance policies in companies other than se with home offices in this city, it is not true that he increased his insursace heavily since the Burdick murder. The Evening World to-day traced p $225,000 insurance on Pennell's life, most of which has been in force for ore than ten years. There can be no contest on these policies, even with it were proven that Pennell committed suicide, for suicide does not allogs personal estate. His will was made a week before his death. He names "Moe" Levy as executor, and after bequeathing $100,000 in the Equitable Life, taken out in 1891, and $100,000 after bequeathing $100 to $250 each to brothers, nephows and nieces, leaves $100 carried $25,000. This policy was issued more than two years ago.

upon the reports of two expert accountants. District-Attorney Jerome has called upon the company for the production of its books.

Officials of the company have informed Mr. Jerome that they will furnish him with any or all the information he desires at any time he may call for it.

The principal charges made by the experts' reports are that some of the officers or directors of the company have insued false statements of its financial condition; declared dividends when they should have levied assessments, and in certain statements of the company's condition over-estimated its resources and has either undervalued or entirely omitted mention of enormous liabilities.

Say Deficit Became Surplus.

The most startling statement is that on June 30, 1991, the company claimed a surplus of $5,463,465.52, while both of the experts report that on that date instead of being a surplus there was an actual deficit of $18,597,4333.10.

Both experts declare that this difference was created by the company onitting mention of liabilities approximating $20,000,000.

The interests bringing the matter to the attention of the District-Attorney, first employed John C. Hertle to make an investigation of the company as an expert accountant. Mr. Hertle was head of the Commissioners of Accounts of Greater New York from 1898 to 1902.

Never but once in my entire professional experience have I been called upon to deal with statements so ridiculous upon their face, so preposterous from beginning to end and so plainly intended for an ulterior purpose."

Anderson, Pendleton & Anderson, lawyers at No. 25 Broad street, and attorneys for Wormser & Co., and other stockholders of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company, who are opposing the Interurban Company lease, issued a statement to-day disclaiming, in behalf of their clients, any connection with, directly or indirectly, the charges against the Metropolitan Street Railway Company lodged with the District-Attorney. His report was so startling that his employers were not content to accept it alone, and unknown to him they employed Max Teichmann, a certified publie accountant of Baltimore, to go over the same work. De Lancey Nicoli, one of the counsel of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company, had a half hour's conference with Mr. Jerome to-day. When Mr. Nicoli left the District-Attorney's office he was asked if Mr. Jerome had taken up the matter of the charges against the railway company, and he replied:

"He has."

Mr. Jerome was seen a few minutes later and eaid that the matter needed considerable attention before he could make a statement, and that he expected to make such a statement this afternoon.
